

Calvin Reynolds

Driver/Motorcycle-Snowmobile Racer/Flagman/Track Owner

Calvin Reynolds has been involved in racing at a variety of levels – as a stock car driver and owner, as a flagman, as a track owner and back as a race driver. Calvin has even raced motorcycles and snowmobiles. But it is his accomplishments at Beech Ridge Speedway where he is most known, excluding his success in the business world selling motorcycles and snowmobiles. Calvin's stock car racing career began in 1960 in the Class B Bomber division at Beech Ridge. He won back-to-back Bomber track championships in 1969 and 1970. Three years later, Calvin shocked the Maine racing community when he purchased Beech Ridge from founder Jim McConnell. In 1981, eight years after purchasing the track, Calvin sold the speedway to Ralph Cusack. Calvin dusted off the racing helmet and returned to racing, driving in the speedway's Late Model division. In 1983, Calvin finally retired from the driver's seat to watch son Steve race and to concentrate on his growing motorcycle and snowmobile dealership business. Calvin is a member of the Beech Ridge Hall of Fame and recipient of the Memorial Blazer.
